

“Children should be taught the value of money at a very early age.” Do you agree?

Why? Why not? PERSUASIVE ESSAY. 300 WORDS.

To start with, we must observe that children can not understand the value and power of money even because they can not distinguish from one coin to another.

When they are getting older, they start to realize that they can obtain different things with money. What is also important is the way of life they have on their own families. This fact could make them more materialistic.

Regarding parents' attitude, I think that this is the most important point.

If parents give to children all the money everytime they ask for , they can think that this is the normal attitude. Thus, they will end up thinking that all that they have to do in order to get something is asking for money.

In this way, parents must explain them that they have to make a great effort to earn money and they must use it properly.

As I have said before, the view of money depends on the way of life.

Probably, children who grow in an upper class and whose parents give to them all their wishes, think much more in money than children who are poor and live in a little means.

They have different points of view according to money. The former think that the money is for all that they want to get, as buying presents, books or whatever. The latter will think that money helps them to eat, to dress and so on.

Therefore, parents have the important fact of explaining what they can do with money, how can spend it properly and, above all, that money doesn't fall down from heaven and they must work very hard to get it.

Many times, when children don't get all they want, they usually start to cry. If you feel pain and give money to them rather than explain them why you can not do it, they will have an strategy in order to obtain it.

It doesn't mean that you are a bad parents; it means that you are teaching them that, although we really want something, sometimes we can not get it.

For all that reasons, we can conclude that parents have the key to teach their children the value of money and that if they use it properly, they will be very happy in their lives.
